THE EDITOR of a bibliography builds on the work of generations of librarians and students. A long, thin line of bibliographers, from Pliny H. White and Marcus D. Gilman to Harold Goddard Rugg, has scrutinized, collected, and listed for the sake of books and Vermont. Gilman used his retirement from a lucrative business to concentrate on publishing, in the Montpelier Argus and Patriot, one of the few great state bibliographies of the nineteenth century. G. Grenville Benedict, while still editor of the Burlington Free Press, transformed in 1897 Gilman's newspaper columns of 1879–1880 into an enlarged volume. Matt Bushnell Jones found time from his work as counsel for the New England Telephone Company to collect, write, and publish Vermont state and local history and prepare a substantial list of additions to Gilman.

Rugg, associated with the Dartmouth College Library for over half a century, from undergraduate days until his death in 1957, paid loving attention to its archives and special collections. He was the kind of Vermonter who intensely appreciated the place he was rooted in—its people, nature, and books. He could go to the ends of the earth for rarities, and his mind and heart were open, but Hanover satisfied him as his parish and center.

A prince of collectors, he was infrequently prodded into print to share his delight in collecting and his impressive knowledge derived from collecting. He actively developed the collections of the Vermont Historical Society during his lifetime, as chairman of its library committee, and willed his own collection of Vermontiana to the Society. For more than twenty years he listed and commented on recent Vermont books in the Vermont Library Bulletin. As a byproduct of his collecting, he assembled titles for a bibliography of Vermont local history. Marcus A. McCorison, who had hoped to complete this work while at Dartmouth, made Rugg's entries (some 1,500) available to this project, to its considerable enrichment.

The University of Vermont, through its Bailey/Howe Library, gave a great deal of help toward this volume. It allowed me to use for many months the typing room in the special collections area, adjacent to the open stacks of Vermontiana, and paid for much of the necessary photocopying. Faculty and staff of the university cooperated with my search as it entered their fields. Almost every member of the library staff helped me in one way or another. My special thanks go to Paul B. Kebabian, director of libraries, my host through most of the time devoted to this volume; Barbara Gay and Nancy Jean Keane-Legrand, who cheerfully solved my many technical problems; Frank Gavett and the interlibrary loan office, who tried as many as thirteen libraries for a single title; Nancy B. Crane and the reference staff, who performed miracles of speedy efficiency combined with courtesy and patience; Suzanne Clark and Ann Gould in the public documents section. Most of all I owe a great deal to John Buechler, Connell Gallagher, Kevin Graffagnino, Catherine Mazza, Nadia Halpern, and students, the staff of special collections, who bore the brunt of my importunities.

Except that my home is in Burlington, I could have started with equal efficiency in Montpelier. I spent more time there than anywhere outside of Burlington, chiefly combing the collections of the Vermont Historical Society. I am grateful to Weston A. Cate, Jr., director, Laura P. Abbott, librarian, Reidun Dahle Nuquist, assistant librarian, Mary Pat Johnson, and Robert Malvern, who performed wonders of retrieval and interpretation; also their marvelous corps of volunteers, notably Lorimer S. Brigham and Edward A. Hoyt. Vivian Bryan, in charge of the Law and Documents Unit of the Vermont State Department of Libraries, ably supplemented their help.

My thanks go also to scores of libraries for duties done in full measure. Our project imposed heavy burdens on their staffs. Often I asked for a search before I visited them, but even when unannounced, I frequently received special attention and privileges to expedite the work. After I left I needed further help by telephone and mail.

I benefited from the grants of stack privileges to the editor by the libraries of Boston University, Dartmouth College, and Harvard University. My thanks go also to Alfred Toborg and Graham Newell of Lyndon State College and Holman D. Jordan of Castleton State College for unlimited access to their libraries' Vermont collections. The late Howard C. Rice brought vast experience to the criticism of the Windham County section of this volume. Lawrence E. Wikander, Williams College Librarian, assigned a search of college periodicals for Vermont items. Robert Buckeye, Nina Mudge, and Polly Darnell helped serve me the riches of the Middlebury area. Norwich University historian Gary T. Lord, curator of special collections, Sidney G. Morse, former archivist, and Ann Turner, librarian, and her staff, enabled the Bassetts to do in one day what would have taken weeks without their previous search.

For special gifts of material for examination and for lists of titles, for extending my coverage in areas I did not have time to reach by making their unpublished research available, for hospitality, and for other performance beyond the call of duty, I thank Ellen F. Adams, Collamer M. Abbott, Irene E. Allen, Margaret Allen, Betty Bandel, Marjorie Dana Barlow, C. G. Bennett, Kristina Bielenberg, David J. Blow, George B. Preface

It is the purpose of the preface in the volumes of the Bibliographies of New England History series to explain the means by which the bibliographies are being produced, and the relationship of the parts to the whole. Both the project itself and the manner in which it is being accomplished should be of interest to the historical community. To our knowledge, this series is the first regional historical bibliography with a claim to comprehensiveness to be compiled in this country. As such, it constitutes a landmark in American historical scholarship. How the project came about and is being accomplished is not easily explained, but it may be of even greater significance. An account of the origins and early history of the project appeared in the preface to the first volume in the series, Massachusetts: A Bibliography of Its History. More recently, I described the project to the 1980 annual meeting of the Vermont Historical Society, and my address was subsequently published in the January/February 1981 issue of Vermont History News. The publication of this fourth volume out of a projected seven means that we have passed the midway point in the series. It is thus particularly appropriate to take this opportunity to review the development of the project and the plans for its completion.

In the beginning there was the perception of a problem and a need. Scholars, teachers, librarians, amateur historians, collectors, and others interested in the history of New England have long been aware of the lack of any adequate bibliographical key or access to the vast historical resources of the region. Individual efforts to solve the problem have been defeated by its size and complexity. In recent decades the work of a growing number of scholars has emphasized the need for such a key, even as their writings have made the problem ever larger.

In the late 1960s a number of individuals and organizations held meetings to discuss the problem. The result was the formation in 1969 of the Committee for a New England Bibliography, to compile and publish a multi-volume bibliography of New England history; it became a nonprofit, tax-exempt corporation in 1970. In the course of the next several years, the committee formulated plans for its organization, editorial guidelines, publishing arrangements, and fund raising. Recognizing that the scope of the project could be practically limitless but that our resources would not be, we sought to bring under bibliographical control as much historical material on New England as we judged practicable. We wanted to produce a bibliography that would be of the greatest use to the greatest number of researchers—one that, although necessarily limited, would have a clear identity and be comprehensive within its defined limits. The result of our agreement on these points was a decision to include in the bibliography only printed works written as history or having an historical dimension or nature. Excluded, therefore, were unpublished writings and the vast substratum of manuscripts and source materials that underlie and support published history. Some may question our particular exclusions. None, I think, would question the need to limit the scope of the project. Whether we were too ambitious in defining the bibliography remains to be seen. As to whether we were ambitious enough, I would only say that a projected total of twenty years is about as much time as any committee ought to spend on any bibliography.

Other decisions made by the committee were relatively easy. In regard to the chronological span, we decided we would include works written from "earliest settlement" down to the time each volume was compiled. We would limit our search to collections in New England plus the Library of Congress. We would include foreign language publications. We would have the bibliographies arranged geographically with subject and author indexing. We would have individual volumes for each of the six states, if possible, and a final, general volume for works on the region. We also established policies regarding verification of entries, citation, location of copies, and annotation. We had early on dismissed as impractical and undesirable the possibility of compiling a selective bibliography. Finally, we decided that to get the job done well and expeditiously we should employ a professional bibliographer or historian who would devote full time to the project.

The committee has always recognized that finding adequate financial support for this project would be a great problem. We relied then, as we rely now, on the understanding of the need for the bibliography and the merits of our project. Support was first sought from, and demonstrated by, the libraries and the academic and historical institutions of New England. Once this base was established, the search for support was directed more towards foundations and private enterprise. In 1972 we received a two-year matching grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. This enabled the committee to appoint its first editor, John D. Haskell, Jr., and commence work on the Massachusetts volume.

Other problems took even longer to resolve. These included finding a publisher sensitive to the professional criteria established for the series, and developing a committee structure suited to the scope and complexity of the project. In 1974 we signed a contract with G. K. Hall and Co. for publishing the series. It took us until 1976 to arrive at a committee structure that distributed authority and responsibility in a fashion best calculated to achieve our objective.

Despite the problems, the project has progressed. The Massachusetts volume, with 13,520 entries, was published in 1976. The Maine volume, with 5,355 entries, was published in 1977. The New Hampshire volume, with 6,542 entries, was published in 1979. Now, two years later, we are concluding work on the Vermont volume, with a total of 6,413 entries. The favorable reception accorded the volumes published so far has been gratifying to the committee. Perhaps particularly so has been the interest in the series expressed outside New England, testifying, as it does, to the national significance of the project. According to a study we made recently, nearly three-fourths of the existing volumes in the series held by research institutions are outside New England.

Although pleased by the favorable reception of the volumes, we have tried to heed criticisms and suggestions for improving the series. It is a constant challenge to the committee's editors and editorial board to interpret and apply our guidelines so as to make each of the volumes as comprehensive and useful as possible, and at the same time maintain the consistency that is essential to a series. A comparison of the volumes published will allow the reader to judge how well we are succeeding. I should like to emphasize that the committee desires to have errors and omissions called to its attention, because it intends to publish a list of additions and corrections at the conclusion of the series.

Although it is not easy to analyze an ongoing project in which one is involved, it is important for anyone interested in the project, or seeking to emulate it, to understand the support the project has enjoyed and the reasons for its success to date. First, there has been a considerable amount of good will and recognition from individuals and institutions. There has been some surprise that such a knotty problem could yield to such an approach but, more important, there has been general recognition that the Bibliographies of New England History are, in fact, a valuable and long-needed research tool for a wide range of users, and that they are stimulating as well as assisting historical research and writing on New England. It has also been recognized that, for all the expense, the project is being accomplished with great economy. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine how a bibliographical undertaking of this scale and complexity could be accomplished in any other way than by a combination of a small professional staff and a committee of volunteers to direct and assist, without its cost being many times that of this project.

Second, the project has received a great deal of assistance from New England institutions. This assistance has often been circumscribed, cautious if not almost covert, and sometimes in curious forms, but it has been real. The committee is grateful to those institutions that have been willing to share with us their valued and limited resources of people, time, and facilities.

Thirdly, the committee has been able to bring together and utilize in its volunteer membership a great wealth of knowledge of New England history, research and bibliography, law, publishing, and promotion. Although there is a certain changing or "rolling" character to the active membership as the project moves from state to state, the total membership is now over one hundred, and it is representative of all six New England states and a wide range of backgrounds and disciplines. Throughout the project, we have found it extremely important to emphasize that the responsibility for and authorship of the bibliographies belongs to the whole committee.

Finally, and most crucially, we have been able to find the financial support for the project. So far. Early in the project, on the basis of our estimated needs and possibilities for support, it was decided that a contribution of five hundred dollars or more would qualify the donor as a "sponsor" of the bibliographies. These sponsors now number seventy-five; excepting those who wish to remain anonymous, they are listed herein. Some contributors have given much more than the amount stipulated for a sponsorship, others have given less. All have helped to demonstrate a local or regional commitment to the project and have thereby assisted the committee's efforts to secure major foundation support. The grant awarded us by the National Endowment for the Humanities in 1972 has been renewed three times, on the basis of the committee's raising approximately ten thousand dollars a year in matching funds. It is always a pleasure for me to find an opportunity to express the committee's gratitude to the National Endowment for the Humanities for its support, which has been crucial to the project, and its appreciation of the guidance and counsel provided by the staff of the Endowment over the years.

Because of this support, assistance, and good will, the committee has been able to carry the project past the midway point in the series. Now, as we complete the volumes on Northern New England and turn southward, there is to be another changing of the guard on the committee's staff.

When John D. Haskell, Jr., the committee's original editor, left the project in 1978, we were in the final stages of compiling the New Hampshire volume. The committee was fortunate to find as his successor an experienced bibliographer and long established historian of New England, T. D. Seymour Bassett, who had been acquainted with and involved in our project since its early days. His expert knowledge of Vermont history made him the logical choice for editor of that state's bibliography, which was next on our schedule. The present volume has been enriched by the comprehensiveness of his search, and also by the authority of his assessment, in his foreword, of what the bibliography reveals about the condition of Vermont's historical record. He retires from the editorship with the completion of this volume, but the committee will continue to have the benefit of his interest and involvement. Also leaving the project is the assistant to the editor, Alice Cook Bassett. For their willingness to come to the aid of the project and devote themselves so wholeheartedly to their arduous labors, the committee and the users of these bibliographies are in their debt.

As for the future of the Bibliographies of New England History, even before this volume appears work will have begun in Rhode Island. That state's volume is scheduled for publication, with approximately six thousand entries, in 1983. In the same year, work will begin in Connecticut. That volume is expected to be one of the largest in the series, with ten or eleven thousand entries, and we plan to publish it in 1986. The project will conclude with the publication of the New England volume. We expect this to be the largest volume in the series, with perhaps fifteen thousand entries. It will list works that deal with New England as a whole, or with two or more states within New England. According to our plans, the New England volume will also contain a section listing the accumulated additions and corrections for the state volumes in the series, and a section listing unpublished historical dissertations and theses on New England and on each of its six states. Clearly, the New England volume will be the crucial capstone of the Bibliographies of New England History.

If, as we plan, the committee publishes the New England volume in 1988, that will round out twenty years' effort to bring this series into existence. We estimate the total direct cost of the project will be close to three quarters of a million dollars. If we were to include the "institutional cost sharing," or voluntary contributions of time and labor since 1968, the total would certainly be more than double that amount. For it, New England and the nation will have a seven-volume guide to the rich history of the region, listing between sixty and seventy thousand writings, and containing much related information helpful to researchers. Reviewers have already suggested that the Bibliographies of New England History series will serve as a model and inspiration for other areas of the country. Undoubtedly, it would be gratifying to this region if it were demonstrated that New England could still show the way!

Yet all this assumes a good deal. Great efforts must still be made if we are to complete the Bibliographies of New England History. However, I believe that if the project continues to receive support from the National Endowment for the Humanities and from new sources of matching funds, then it will succeed. I believe the committee has demonstrated that it has the resources of people and skills, the collective administrative and editorial experience and ability, to complete the project on schedule. Above all, as these great and increasing efforts advance the project, as the well-received volumes accumulate and our files for future volumes expand, I believe that the committee recognizes the increasing weight of its responsibility to succeed in its stated purpose, and grows in its determination to do so.

As to the larger significance of the Bibliographies of New England History, I wrote in the first volume that the series should serve as an instructive example of how, even in times of social disorder and economic distress, scholarly projects of merit can be accomplished by the voluntary, cooperative efforts of individuals and institutions. Now, in the 1980s, it is clear that the existence and fate of such efforts have acquired new importance and urgency.

Foreword

THE COMPLETION of this volume invites an overview of the published history of Vermont. Judging from what has been produced, what more needs to be written? Several historians to whom I put this question replied, thinking of topics untouched or inadequately treated, as well as the constant need to revise from the perspective of the present, "Everything." One even called for a reinterpretation of Ethan Allen, already more written about than any other Vermonter. A look at how Vermont history has evolved and an examination of its coverage of particular topics may suggest more specific answers to the question.

One must first note, with some surprise, how much Vermont history has already been written. Here is a state with virtually no colonial period, a state, as Charles T. Morrissey has explained so eloquently in his bicentennial history, where practically nothing of national importance ever happened, and one which has always had the fewest people of any in New England. Can such a state have much "history"? The committee planning the Bibliographies of New England History expected 3,000 Vermont entries, but here are more than 6,400.

One reason for this profusion is Vermont's kaleidoscopic diversity as a border area. Another is the publicity that for fifty years has successfully identified Vermont as the epitome of old-fashioned rural democracy. A third is the growing number of able writers on Vermont themes whose chief purpose is to entertain a broadening public grown more history-conscious. Three-fifths of the entries in this volume are in serials, most of them addressed to a popular audience. This is journalistic history, sometimes superficial, but at its best, as in Vermont Life, linking background with contemporary significance. Almost any person, place, period, or subject qualifies, but stories about the rich and powerful have more appeal than those about everyday people; catastrophe, war, and other conflict attract more readers than humdrum cooperation and peace. Thus there has been perennial interest in the colonial wars, Indian captivities, and battles of the Revolution when they swirled along the Champlain corridor. Favorite subjects since statehood have included smuggling, Macdonough at Plattsburgh, the St. Albans and Fenian raids, Runaway Pond, and the flood of 1927. There is also a perpetual market for histories related to collectibles, such as stamps, photographs, books, silver, and other antiques, or to hobby subjects like trains, planes, and sports.

Vermont history can entertain and touch the imagination. Yet both common readers and professional historians always have an underlying need for a story that will tell who Vermonters are, that will identify Vermont character. What habits, attitudes, and events have they shared with other kinds of people, and what makes them different? As Vermont character slowly changes, Vermont history (the story that explains how Vermonters have come to be what they are) needs revision. Revisionists, noting the inaccuracies, omissions, and distortions of the previous folklore, treat it as fiction. To me, folklore means the lore, or popular tradition as recorded in histories, that tells essential truths about the life and spirit of a folk. The central message is true, regardless of the particulars.

The first generation of speakers and writers—and we are told that practically all frontier Vermonters were literate—fashioned the first folk history of Vermont. Increasing thousands, trying to let sunlight into the woods west of the upper Connecticut River, spent a confusing pioneer period. Who were they—subjects of France or Great Britain? Under New York or New Hampshire jurisdiction? Were they squatters or freeholders? Echoing the Biblical account of the Flight from Egypt, they decided that they were free, united, independent Vermonters, not in bondage to anyone. Their leaders were a band of heroes, and their deeds at Westminster, Fort Ticonderoga, Hubbardton, Bennington, and Windsor proved that the Republic of Vermont did its duty for American independence.

The legend of those years, spread at first by word of mouth, fed by the first passages in Ethan Allen's 1779 narrative and the products of a score of local printers and broadened in three chapters of the first published Vermont history, by Samuel Williams, was confirmed by the chief politician of this Republic and chief architect of the myth, Ira Allen, in 1798. Once crystallized, it needed only to be transmitted to the next generation by Fourth of July and Bennington Battle Day orations, political speeches, and the talk of veterans at the general store or tavern. Four short histories, published between 1828 and 1833, "adapted to the use of the higher classes in our schools," according to Zadock Thompson's 1833 preface, packaged the story. Its classic expression was Daniel Pierce Thompson's 1839 novel, The Green Mountain Boys.

Few challenged this myth until half a century ago. The guardians of the temple defended it vigorously against the occasional outsider. Frequent reprintings of Thompson's novel and the repetition of the theme in every general history of Vermont past Crockett's, as J. Kevin Graffagnino outlined in a Vermont History article of 1978, transmitted the legend to upcoming generations. "The myth and reality" is ably summarized by H. N. Muller III in the bicentennial compendium, Perspectives '76. It is the essence of the "rhetoric and ritual" that Charles T. Morrissey inveighs against in his history.

Why does what satisfied so many for so long no longer suffice? Gradually, new arrivals found the Allen myth one to which they could not relate. Yet the force of tradition scours a channel that is hard to divert. The revision of Vermont history has only recently begun, although Earle Newton and Chilton Williamson called for it in the decade after World War II. Now I add my voice, but with the warning that today's history becomes tomorrow's folklore.

One clear need in any revision is to shape a new, comprehensive image of Vermont with a strong ingredient of ethnic history. Indians have been treated as if they never lived here, made refugees from their own land. Immigrants who were refugees from the rural poverty of Quebec or Ireland, from American slavery or the pogroms of czars and Hitler, found nothing written in Vermont history to say that they counted. Rowland E. Robinson was the first historian, in 1892, to devote as much as four pages to "French Canadians," except for some of Abby M. Hemenway's contributors to her Gazetteer. Robinson gave them a Jim Crow image—"their fingers were as light as their hearts"—and concluded, "no alien drift from northward or over seas can ever fill" the place of the emigrating Yankees.

No substantial change in Vermont historians' attitudes occurred until Elin Anderson's pioneer study of Burlington in the 1930s. Another twenty years passed before the Vermont Historical Society, under Richard G. Wood, tried to stimulate ethnic studies. The later immigrants had received sympathy as victims, or were deplored as the sources of social problems, but were not fully accepted until after World War II, when they began to share community leadership. Consequently, we are on the threshhold of major historical attention to them. First fruits are Myron Samuelson's Story of the Jewish Community of Burlington and Haviland and Power's The Original Vermonters, with David J. Blow's first volume on the Roman Catholic Diocese of Burlington (to 1910) soon to follow.

Because ethnic history has its special difficulties, the field is strewn with unfinished work: Allen R. Foley's and Ralph D. Vicero's long manuscripts on French Canadian immigration to New England, Gwilym R. Roberts's extensive research on the Welsh in the slate region, and many other less ambitious projects. Such studies require facility in the immigrant tongues, oral history and archeological skills, and sleuthing after other sources not often in libraries. The ideal calls for comprehension of the interaction between earlier and later arrivals and the complexities of the interlocking community institutions that the newcomers changed.

Before reviewing what other kinds of history need attention, what about the persons available to do the work? Only recently have professional historians in any number begun to investigate state and local subjects. Few graduate schools before World War I urged their students in that direction, beyond the colonial period. The first Vermont product was Clarence W. Rife's Yale thesis on the Haldimand negotiations during the Revolution, completed in 1922 but never published. Others who followed during the interwar years were E. D. Andrews and J. C. Huden at Yale, H. F. Wilson and Lewis D. Stilwell at Harvard, Florence Woodard and Chilton Williamson at Columbia, D. M. Ludlum at Princeton, and Walter T. Bogart at Stanford. They published their work, which was mainly on the early nineteenth century, through the Vermont Historical Society and the Columbia University Press.

The situation changed after World War II. Since 1945, more than forty University of Vermont faculty and staff have published work on Vermont history, as against about ten in the thirty-five years before. The productivity of the rest of the dozen Vermont universities and colleges has likewise expanded. Half of these institutions have special Vermont collections, and most of these are used for some instruction in Vermont history. University presses throughout the Northeast have accepted many manuscripts on Vermont history.

Clergy, teachers, and lawyers, less frequently editors and physicians, wrote the earlier histories. Members of the same professions are writing Vermont history now, with additions from the fields of publishing, reporting, publicity, and bookdealing, but later in life, often soon after retirement. Comparatively rare was or is the businessman-historian, such as W. H. Tucker or T. H. Canfield. Sometimes the modest executive with autobiographical yearning may camouflage his reminiscences in the cloak of the history of his institution. This growth in the Vermont historian pool came partly with the recent immigration of many with leisure, skills, and interests in the local past. It has also grown out of a conscious policy adopted by the State Bicentennial Commission to involve as many as possible in historical work, and therefore to emphasize town projects.

Most town histories use a topical organization. Consequently politics, traditionally central in state and national history, becomes at the local level merely one of a number of topics seen in a social context. The result is a great, uneven body of data for a state social and economic history, exceeding in bulk and coverage the nineteenth century collection by Miss Hemenway.

Town histories tend toward the geographical approach. Henry Swan Dana's excellent History of Woodstock is organized by roads; others treat the central villages, then hamlets and school districts. But while the sources in the town or church clerk's care often bias the historian toward limiting his scope to the town, most events, from forest fires to fevers, do not respect town lines. There is a great deal to be done in basin or range history. Russell Farnsworth's Over Cram Hill, Robert Hagerman's Mansfield, and a few more, stand alone on the heights. Aside from repeated attention to the large border valleys of Lake Champlain and the Connecticut River, histories of floods, and a few studies in the White River basin, Ralph Hill's Winooski is the only successor to Samuel Sumner's Missisco Valley (1860).

County history in New England, by contrast, is neither written nor needed. In no volume of this series has the percent of county entries exceeded ten, and most of these entries concern a few towns, not the whole county. In the Vermont volume, only one entry out of sixteen is in the county section. County historical societies have been organized in Addison, Chittenden, Orleans, Rutland, and Windham Counties. None of their publications have dealt much with the counties at large, which have few functions except to elect state senators and hold courts. The "county histories" of the late nineteenth century were basically gazetteers, business directories, and collections of town histories. The only need for county history will be where the urban area around a small city coincides roughly with county lines, as in Chittenden County.

Local historians of every kind contributed more titles about the 1791–1865 period than about any other. Within this period, the early nineteenth century bulks the largest, with twice as many entries as for the Revolutionary era. In this frequently worked field, first attention went to fitting the War of 1812 and the Civil War into the prevailing myth. The military strategy seemed the same in 1814 as in 1777; the goal of extending freedom and unity, the same in 1861 as in 1776. Hardly any Vermonters volunteered for the distant War with Mexico, which seemed an extension of slavery, not freedom, and appeared in later histories as part of the story of the antislavery struggle. On the other hand, Vermont did not object to the imperialism of 1900. Frank L. Greene, who was a soldier in the War with Spain, later linked it with the first expansionism that brought Vermont into the Union.

To turn to particular social and economic topics, beginning with those most adequately treated for the early nineteenth century, religion is one which has by no means been neglected, yet most of the basic questions about its history in Vermont remain unanswered. A chapter in William G. McLoughlin's New England Dissent gives the background of Congregational disestablishment in 1807, but when did the disabilities of other denominations really end? How did the shortage of clergy and rural isolation affect hierarchical denominations? What led to the centralization in recent times of those with congregational polity?

Pastor and deacon historians have written individual parish histories and, for the Baptists, Episcopalians, Methodists, and Universalists, statewide surveys. The Congregationalists, although the largest Protestant denomination, have no published general history, but J. M. Comstock's compendium is immensely useful. Arthur F. Stone, "The Religious Life of the State," in his Vermont of Today, is almost alone in comprehending all groups. Other exceptions on specific themes are J. E. Goodrich's essay denying religious motives for earliest immigration, and a very few town sketches. Several historians are following up Ludlum's brilliant but introductory chapter on revivals and missions out of which reforms grew, notably a chapter in the forthcoming book on the 1830s by J. J. Duffy and H. N. Muller III.

Despite the disappearance of most district school records, every town history has a school section, with emphasis on the period 1791–1865. The legislative framework of local and state school administration is well told, for this and later periods, but we can only guess how the school reflected the society. Windows have been opened by Margaret Nelson, Betty Bandel, and Marshall M. True. True's brief overview, "The History of Education in Vermont, 1791–1969," for the Vermont Academy of Arts and Sciences, has emphatically established the need for a better state history of public education.

The academy in Vermont was a strange hybrid of public and private, partly preparatory for college and in some ways its equal. E. A. Andrews surveyed the academy past the Civil War, but only half of his work was published. There are exemplary chronicles of the Methodist Montpelier Seminary by Walter R. Davenport and of Thetford Academy by Mary Slade, but the unavailability of a large portion of the annual catalogues, the disappearance of academy archives, and the disinclination to use newspaper microfilm has hindered further work. We do not know how the female seminaries fit in, from Emma Willard's to the Rock Point School. We know very little about the history of the Vermont public high school.

At the college level, the twentieth century histories of Norwich University, Middlebury College, and the University of Vermont are better than average in attention to social setting and central ideas; they stress the early nineteenth century. To the more modest efforts for St. Michaels, Champlain, and Trinity Colleges, with their twentieth century material, there will probably be added, within a decade, state college histories, second efforts by the oldest three colleges, and a historian's history of Bennington College by Thomas Brockway. The need and value of college histories is recognized. Who will deal with the faltering and deceased: New Hampton Institute of Fairfax, Windham College of Putney, Mark Hopkins of Brattleboro, Goddard College of Plainfield, and the Putney Graduate School of Teacher Education? There is much on Samuel R. Hall's Concord "normal school," and R. M. Steele published his thesis on teacher education, but who will relate all these parts to each other?

How did other literary institutions—the town library, the newspaper, the club for dramatic or musical performance, study, or reading—educate or reflect society? Most are mentioned in town histories; at anniversaries or building dedications each might look back at its own past; no more has been recorded.

The schools at every level in this rural society must have reflected the chief breadwinner until recently, the farmer. The shape of Vermont agriculture, especially for the early nineteenth century, is clear from regional as well as state and local studies. The roads and turnpikes upon which the farmer depended are well located and described; also his crops, livestock, and woods, his prices and wages. But the farmer's wife and children are more dimly viewed. His debt structure and insurance are known only for the recent period; likewise his attempts at cooperatives or recreation through the Grange, but not those through the Farm Bureau. Did he hunt and fish for food, fun, and conservation, or did he do it indiscriminately?

Railroads have received considerable attention, but the rest of Vermont economic history is abysmally vague, especially for the late nineteenth century. Exceptions are few: Rush Welter's Bennington monograph, Guy Hubbard on Windsor industry, and Wayne G. Broehl's Precision Valley. Many questions remain about the period from the Civil War through World War I, for which there are probably more entries in this volume than for any period except the one preceding it. A full account of Orange County copper mining, by Collamer M. Abbott, lies unpublished in the University of Vermont's Wilbur Collection, with nothing in print but Abbott's brief pamphlet and his other articles. Why was there corporate consolidation in marble, but not for a long time in granite, and never in slate? Did the Central Vermont Railroad dominate the manufacturers, or did the manufacturers control the railroad in order to keep their freight rates low? Who will tell how and when local gave way to national control in talc, asbestos (with a brief reversion to local control by workmen), paper, scales, and so on through the catalog of manufactures?

For industrial material we are thrown back on good town histories like Cabot's Brattleboro, Hayes's Rockingham, Hubbard and Dartt's Springfield, Tucker's Hartford, Gale's Proctor, and Fairbanks's St. Johnsbury. For principal towns like Rutland, Middlebury, Vergennes, Burlington, Montpelier, and Barre, however, there is little past the Civil War. Certainly, a survey of manufacturing, mining, and quarrying, called for by Newton thirty-five years ago and sketched in his Vermont Story, is long overdue.

Also neglected for the years since the Civil War have been constitutional, legal, and even political history. Legal briefs, court reports, and records, excluded from this bibliography, are available for such study and will also reveal much business history. Why did rural Vermont remain Republican from the origin of the party to the 1960s? The continuing studies of F. M. Bryan, S. B. Hand, and D. G. Sanford, originally aimed at understanding the erosion of Republican hegemony since the flood of 1927 but subsequently extended back to the general incorporation act of 1870 and the beginnings of centralization in Vermont state government, should provide an answer.

This study of the Republican party represents the new cross-fertilization of history and the social sciences. Social scientists, while seeking patterns in the data of the recent past, have produced histories of their special subjects; partly because of their activities, almost half of the entries in this volume were published during the past thirty years. Their work has influenced a growing group of historians, who have used theoretical frameworks and quantitative methods to analyze such subjects as internal migration, social mobility, social classes, comparative site valuation, and the community organization of small towns and neighborhoods, as well as to correlate voting behavior with other social factors. So far, however, practically no historians have applied these techniques to Vermont.

An important development in twentieth century Vermont has been the growth of the recreation business. One's first impression is that this is an untouched field, but a closer look finds many suggestive essays. All of the following questions have been raised by one probe or another into the subject. Why did Vermont, which established the first state publicity service in the United States, trail all the other Northeastern states in developing its recreation potential? Is the simple answer enough, that for one reason or another, more Vermonters continued to farm more land longer than others in neighboring states? Did the selling of Vermont as a "summer paradise" depend on shifts in the national idea of a beautiful landscape, as Andrea Rebek and William Lipke suggest? Was it linked to the increase in urban leisure time, as Harold F. Wilson wrote nearly half a century ago? How much were tourists selected and routed by the kind of transportation available? What part has photography played in alluring the leisured to "unspoiled" Vermont? Were they selected, as Dorothy Canfield Fisher claimed, by Vermonters' refusal to kowtow, by their treating "visitors" as members of the family? How did Republican Vermont come so easily to accept federal aid in the form of Civilian Conservation Corps forestry programs?

For a synthesis of Vermont's recreation history, one might study the role of James P. Taylor, whose papers are arranged and unexploited at the Vermont Historical Society. Secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce for a quarter century after 1922, Taylor is credited with the first promotion of skiing, when he taught at Vermont Academy before World War I; with the idea of "the Long Trail: a footpath in the wilderness," before Benton Mackaye thought of the Appalachian Trail; with educating Vermonters to the requirements of the business; and with expanding their perspective to include a four-season offering.

The whole range of intimate, personal, and family life has until very recently been thought outside the boundaries of history, and it is still hard to find the sources. Where but in confidential records is there evidence of sexual behavior? Where but in love letters and diaries, the courtship patterns? When did women work in the fields as well as in the farmhouse? When did working women find liberation? Did disfranchised women have a vote in the household? Until we have more women's history, human history cannot replace men's history. Faith Pepe's topical bibliography and essay in the Spring 1977 Vermont History points both to the vacant lot of women's history and to some building materials.

It has often been said that our national history will be enriched when it has an abundance of state history to draw upon. Conversely, local history will improve as it learns from the histories of larger areas, from the region to the continent. The New England volume in the present series will contain many additional titles partly about Vermont history, such as Edward Kirkland's Men, Cities and Transportation, or those involving New Hampshire or Massachusetts with Vermont. Finally, we should not neglect the allusions to Vermont in such general works as Frederick Jackson Turner's essay on the Old West.

Passage of time and the inevitable limitations and imperfections of this volume will generate the need for another Vermont bibliography, especially a computerized list fitted into the national library network that can be kept up to date; but the cost will long inhibit its preparation and publication. For the location of manuscript and published sources, and the critical review of secondary works, we must depend on subject lists, professional journals, and essays appended to each new scholarly work. Although six-sevenths of the titles in this volume were published since 1897, when Gilman's Bibliography of Vermont appeared, the publication explosion that they represent may be over. Popular interest in history may recede, and high costs may check the output of books and articles in history as in other fields. But as the present moves into the past, there will always be new history to write, as well as new ways of looking at the old.

Introduction

To make the best use of this bibliography, the reader needs to know its scope and arrangement. The coverage of this volume, the fourth prepared by the Committee for a New England Bibliography, reflects editorial guidelines worked out by the Committee in its early years and refined by its experience with the three previous volumes.

The Committee's basic aim is to include within its volumes all published works about any aspect of life in New England that were written with a conscious historical purpose. Our listings are inclusive, not selective; we make no qualitative judgments. Each volume extends its coverage of published material to a particular terminal date, generally the end of the year in which editorial work began. For the Vermont volume the date is December 1979, although later works have been included when they came to the editor's attention.

Any bibliography has to set limits to its coverage, and these must sometimes be arbitrary. For example, faced with innumerable annual reports of organizations and accounts of floods, hurricanes, and mountain climbs, we decided that for a work to be "historical," and therefore eligible for inclusion, it had to be written at least a year after the event. Our guidelines also rule out many materials that serve the purposes of historians: manuscripts, printed primary sources such as government documents, biographies and autobiographies, works of genealogy, fiction, writings for children, maps and atlases, directories, almanacs, and guidebooks.

These exclusions, however, are not absolute. Seeking the broader purpose of including as many historical writings as possible, the Committee and its editorial board have allowed exceptions, guided by the editor's knowledge of the works in question, even with some loss of clarity in our guidelines. Thus we have included family histories, as distinct from straight tabular genealogies. We have included published diaries and travel accounts, collected biographies, and even individual biographies and autobiographies that focus on or are significant for the history of a state or a locality within it. We have included edited series of archival or vital records. We have included state and county atlases that have historical essays. The state guides produced by the Federal Writers Project have been included on the same basis. For Vermont, Hamilton Childs's and other county directories and registers appear because of the quantities of local history they contain. We thus try to go beyond the form and determine the substance.

The user of the Vermont volume can also better understand the scope of the work by knowing something of the editor's search process. Starting with the Library of Congress shelf list for Vermont local history (F46–F60), I added titles from John Borden Armstrong's manuscript bibliography of New England, and from files previously assembled, particularly during John D. Haskell, Jr.,'s original search of some 213 serials for the whole series. I then examined the shelves of the Wilbur Collection of Vermontiana at the University of Vermont, checking with the shelf list and the staff for missing materials. Titles which, on examination, fitted our guidelines were checked with the National Union Catalog, where other titles were found. I began the search of the town history section of the Vermont Historical Society library when I had completed listings from its counterpart at the University of Vermont. The complete examination of these two collections included the uncataloged part of the Rugg Collection at the Vermont Historical Society and some of the uncataloged pamphlet files at the university. From time to time, as problems arose, I asked the authors of particular works for help and for complete lists of their Vermont publications. Their full responses revealed articles in periodicals not searched.

On completion of the search in the two major collections, I sent a letter summarizing the guidelines and enclosing a list of entries already located about their towns to officials or individuals active in the historical societies of Barnet, Bethel, Braintree, Cabot, Dorset, East Montpelier, Georgia, Grafton, Isle La Motte, Jericho, Ludlow, Manchester, Middletown Springs, Norwich, Orleans County Historical Society at Brownington, Royalton, Rutland, St. Albans, Shaftsbury, Shrewsbury, Strafford, Thetford, and Woodstock; also the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Foundation at Woodstock. Almost every one answered, with usable additions. I could not visit all their collections, but I did examine some of them, together with Vermont shelves and files in public libraries at Vergennes, Brandon, Pittsford, Rutland, Manchester, Bennington, Brattleboro, Bellows Falls, Springfield, Woodstock, Barre, Montpelier, St. Johnsbury, Derby Line, and Newport. I also visited the libraries of Bennington College, Castleton State College, Goddard College, Lyndon State College, Middlebury College, and Norwich University; the Park-McCullough House in North Bennington, the George Russell Collection in Arlington, and the Swift Research Library of the Sheldon Museum, Middlebury; and private collections in Bradford, Brattleboro, Randolph, Shoreham, and Westminster.

Outside Vermont, I visited the libraries of Dartmouth College and Williams College. In the Boston area I checked, with three helpers, the catalog entries for Vermont at the Massachusetts State Library (also its local history shelves), the Boston Public Library, and the libraries of Harvard University, Harvard-Andover Divinity School, and the New England Historic Genealogical Society, as well as particular titles and serials at each. These institutions provided only a small number of titles not already located in Vermont.

Some three-fifths of the more than 6,400 entries in this volume are articles in 331 serials, 114 of them Vermont serials. In all, I searched completely 62 Vermont serials as far as available, half of them having only short runs. Abbreviations have been used for titles frequently cited; these are listed on pages xxxi–xxxii. A few serials have titles that appear to be abbreviated but are not, such as the VEA News and Hall A. Serial articles are normally cited by volume number, the date of the particular issue, and the inclusive pages. Exceptions are series of Reports and Proceedings which use no volume number, undated issues of Green Mountain Whittlin's, and newspaper items, for which volume numbers are not commonly cited. A complete list of serials searched is planned for the final volume.

One of the last editorial processes was to examine other lists of titles, such as Marcus D. Gilman's Bibliography of Vermont and the slips for a projected Vermont bibliography prepared over several decades by Harold G. Rugg of the Dartmouth College Library (see Acknowledgments). Only titles that I could locate were listed. Practically all of the entries in this volume were verified by direct examination, and the rest by some current authority.

As the table of contents shows, entries in the volume are arranged geographically. A comprehensive index supplies access to subjects, authors, and places. A headnote to the index explains how to use it. Throughout the volume, the spelling of place names follows Esther M. Swift, Vermont Place Names (entry 1940).

Works dealing with more than one town in the same county are listed under the county; those about areas in more than one county, under the state. Pliny H. White's Annals of Salem, concerning an extinct town that was divided between Newport and Derby, is entered in Orleans County. History about Mount Mansfield, with its slopes in two counties, is entered under Vermont; about Mount Ascutney, whose slopes are in three towns, under Windsor County. The SEE ALSO references that appear at the end of the listings for many counties and towns will guide the reader to material in such boundary-spanning works.

Entries for the Vermont volume were assembled according to the rule that items concerning more than one New England state will appear in the final volume of this series, on New England. Three or four titles about the upper Connecticut Valley were included here because they were primarily about the Vermont side or because it had seemed more useful to list them under both New Hampshire and Vermont. Discussion of the temporary union of several New Hampshire towns with Vermont is included, but the bibliography of the Dresden, Vermont, press, located during that union in Hanover, New Hampshire, has been entered in the New Hampshire volume. Material on the New Hampshire Grants, central to Vermont's earliest history, is included here.

Except for the fortifying of Mount Independence and the battle of Hubbardton, the events of the War for Independence in the Champlain Valley occured in what is now New York. Since, however, historians have always included in Vermont history the capture of Fort Ticonderoga, the battle of Valcour Bay, Burgoyne's invasion and the battle of Bennington, and, in the War of 1812, Macdonough's victory at Plattsburgh Bay, titles on these subjects have been included. Ira Allen, even in Paris and Philadelphia after 1795, focused his filibustering intrigues on Vermont; hence his many versions of the Olive Branch affair and other titles about him in this period are included. Civil War regimental histories, however, focus on the war in the South. Except for a few with substantial treatments of recruiting and other Vermont acitivities, they have been excluded.

Works by the same author are arranged by title in a single alphabetical sequence, whether done alone or with collaborators. A dash stands for the author or authors in the preceding entry. Where a work is based on tape-recorded interviews, both the interviewer and the informant are listed as authors, with the informant first. When the author as a modest amateur hides behind "compiler," I have used the compiler as main author entry. Otherwise I used a title entry and indicated the compiler after the title. When short-lived groups, such as bicentennial committees, prepared a history, I preferred using title entries rather than corporate author entries. Business corporations often assign anniversary histories to their public relations departments, one person being acknowledged in the preface as the author. I have used that person's name as main entry, in brackets.

Author, title, or imprint, when not shown on the title page or verso, appears in brackets. We cite the best or latest edition of a book, if there is more than one, with the date of the first edition, if known, in parentheses immediately after the title. Modern reprints are noted when they have come to my attention. Pagination indicates last numbered page, with substantial unnumbered pages shown in brackets. Broadside dimensions are in centimeters, height before width. After the entries for this volume had been numbered, a few instances were discovered where an item had been repeated, in variant form or under a different heading, or had been put in the wrong geographical group. Correcting such errors left some numbers designated as "NO ENTRY" and others inserted as 1571A, etc.

Because the National Union Catalog locates its titles, we cite library locations (see list of symbols at page xxxiii) only for works not found there. No locations are given for periodicals because the Union List of Serials and New Serial Titles are generally available. We hope the list of cities, towns, and unorganized places arranged by counties (pp. xxix-xxx) and the list of supplementary bibliographies and guides (pp. 295–96) will be helpful.

Since there is enormous opportunity for error in this kind of work, the Committee welcomes corrections and any additions that fall within the editorial guidelines and before the terminal date of a particular volume. We expect to publish these in the final volume of the series.

Those students interested in the history of a place should visit its libraries, historical societies, and local historians and collectors to find scrapbooks, clipping files, newspapers (with the aid of indexes listed in R. L. Hagerman's entry 874), tape recordings, prints and photographs, uncataloged materials, and works added since this volume was prepared. There will always be something new, unknown to the previous searcher.

Index

This index includes all authors, editors, and compilers, as well as subjects and places. The references are to entry numbers, not pages. If there is a bibliography for a particular heading, it is listed first and is separated by a semicolon from the other entry numbers. To find general works of state history, see "histories" as a subheading of "Vermont." We distinguish persons with identical names by vital dates or other data. Both pseudonyms and autonyms are indexed.

We alphabetize word by word rather then letter by letter (New Haven before Newark). Corporate authors divided by a period (as Vermont. Department of Agriculture) precede names of institutions not so divided (as Vermont Bar Association).

Headings for places include names of extinct towns, former as well as present names of towns, and names of places within towns. Where a work is about several towns, as in Scrimgeour's sketches of some Franklin County Episcopal churches, those towns are indexed; but sections on towns in county or state histories or other works of larger scope are not indexed.

Library of Congress subject headings have usually been preferred. The user can find material about one subject in one place (e.g., Franco-Americans in Winooski) by first finding the range of entry numbers for that place, and then looking for numbers within that range under the subject heading. Headings with many entries, such as "Churches, Baptist," have often been subdivided by towns. Other church-related headings are used as follows. Under "Churches" are listed entries about parishes of more than one denomination. "Churches, Christian" refers to a denomination in Vermont which merged with the Congregational churches in 1931. "Churches, Union" refers to those which rotated use of a meeting house according to the proportion of donations toward its construction, or of denominational members within its parish limits. "Churches, Federated" are those parishes which join members of two or more denominations under a contract with obligations both to the parish and to each denomination. "Churches, Community" comprise those independent parishes unaffiliated with any denomination.
